Mayor Emanuel talks with aldermen before presenting the 2017 budget to the Chicago City Council. NANCY STONE/TRIBUNE

THERE'S A TAX FOR THAT

EMANUEL OFFERS SPENDING PLAN WITH PLASTIC BAG FEE, MONEY TO HIRE MORE COPS

By John Byrne and Hal Dardick | CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Following a series of major tax hikes, Mayor Emanuel took a victory lap Tuesday for dealing with the city's financial problems, delivering a 2017 budget proposal that includes a plastic bag tax and money to start hiring hundreds of new police officers.

"Today, I am presenting you a budget unlike any we have seen in recent memory," Emanuel said during his remarks in City Council chambers. "It is a budget free of an immediate pension crisis, free of the black cloud of insolvency threatening the retirements of city employees and the financial future of Chicago."

Though Emanuel tried to position his latest budget proposal as a good-news plan after years of punishing tax hikes Chicagoans have had to pay, that's largely a question of semantics. Much of the heavy lifting for the mayor's new spending plan already has taken place, with aldermen last month approving Emanuel's new tax on water and sewer service that will increase bills by more than 30 percent over the next four years. The $239 million a year eventually raised will be spent to shore up long-neglected government worker pension systems.

That allowed Emanuel to put forth a budget without the large general tax increases that have hammered homeowners in recent years.

Taxpayers will continue feeling the effects of a $543 million property tax hike to shore up police and fire pensions. It was part of Emanuel's 2016 budget and is being phased in over four years in a move made to spare aldermen and himself the political danger of repeatedly voting for increases. So property owners will see their taxes go up another $109 million in 2017.

To close a $137.6 million shortfall in the city's corporate budget and pay for additional spending, Emanuel wants to raise $33.7 million by cutting energy costs, leasing "excess city-owned land" and more. And he plans to make $86.4 million through "improved fiscal management."

Emanuel's spending plan relies on getting $25.4 million through new fines and fees. Among those is a 7-cent per bag tax on bags at stores, which will raise about $9 million.

Ald. Michael Zalewski (23rd) said he has concerns about that tax, but he said the fact that retailers have endorsed the plan makes it easier to swallow, as does the fact that the council won't have to endorse another big general tax hike.

Emanuel also will put in place a pilot plan to make drivers pay to use loading zones. Hourly parking rates in loading zones will be set at $14, and the program will start downtown and in two wards near downtown. Once fully in place, the administration says the loading zone program will raise $13 million to $18 million a year.

Emanuel also will charge people more to park at meters around Wrigley Field for Cubs games, concerts and other events held there.

Another $82.3 million is expected to come in through growth in sales tax collections, city permit fees, state remittances and changes to the clerk's office vehicle sticker fees.

The mayor's latest package should have little trouble getting City Council approval, given that the 2016 budget—loaded with a total of $755 million in new taxes—passed 35-15.

The mayor's floor leader, Ald. Patrick O'Connor (40th), said those tough earlier votes helped fix the city's finances so this year's vote will be relatively easy, saying the mayor's plan to hire hundreds of new police officers in 2017 can be covered without another broad tax hike.

In his speech, Emanuel talked up his highly publicized public safety plan to combat the city's rampant violence, which calls for the hiring of 970 additional police officers over two years. The 2017 budget features $40 million to pay salaries and benefits for the first part of that hiring spree, including 250 new patrol officers, 100 new detectives, a total of 88 sergeants and lieutenants and 92 training officers.

The mayor said he's cut the city's operating deficit by 80 percent since he took over in 2011.

"In addition to cutting it, we have stopped the practice of selling assets to pay for operating expenses," Emanuel said. "We have stopped the practice of relying on one-time revenues to balance our budget. We have stopped raiding the rainy day fund just to keep the city afloat."

3-D printed bone implants could be coming soon

By Meg Graham | BLUE SKY INNOVATION

Someday soon, customized bone implants could be as easy as a doctor scanning your body and switching on a 3-D printer.

Ramille Shah, an assistant professor at Northwestern University, led the research on a new synthetic bone-replacement material.

The material is a printable ink made up of a calcium mineral and another polymer used in medical applications—and it's more flexible than some existing materials used for implants, Shah said. The 3-D printed bones could also replace the use of metallic implants or those made from bone harvested from elsewhere in a body.

It would be ideal to implant in a hole left by a tumor in a bone, or in pediatric patients with congenital facial defects, she said.

"They can take a scan of the patient's face and reconstruct—on the computer—an imprint that will be able to fix the defect or make the face more symmetrical, so it's more aesthetically pleasing," she said. "Once they have that scan, they see what exact size and shape will fit that patient."

Northwestern scientists published research on the 3-D printed "hyperelastic bone" in the peer-reviewed journal Science Translational Medicine. Shah is an assistant

She gave the example of being able to use 3-D printing to form a better-fitting knee implant. Today, she said, there are limited selections for size.

"If we can then supplement bone material around an existing normative size ... and I can build around it, I can create a better, more comfortable sizing and fit," she said.

BLOCK IT DOWN

HAWKS' VAN RIEMSODYK HAS A KNACK FOR PUTTING HIMSELF IN THE RIGHT SPOT

By Chris Sosa | REDEYE

Until last season, Trevor van Riemsdyk's hockey career was marked by a fair amount of uncertainty.

Coming out of high school in New Jersey, the defenseman wasn't even sure he was going to play for a Division I team, let alone reach the NHL.

Credit Chicago for setting him on the path he's taken since, which includes a Stanley Cup ring he earned in 2014-15. After high school, van Riemsdyk opted to play in the Chicago Showcase (now called America's Showcase), a tournament sponsored by USA Hockey designed to give players exposure to college programs.

"Going into that tournament, I didn't really know if I was going to play Division I hockey or not, or what I would do," van Riemsdyk said. "I came out here, we got to go to a game at Wrigley. It was a lot of fun, and obviously at the moment you don't know where your hockey career will go from there, and it ended up leading back here."

"It's funny to look back at that and how that tournament and this city kind of changed my hockey career, introduced me to my junior hockey coach which kind of helped show me the way to college."

Undrafted out of the University of New Hampshire, van Riemsdyk signed an entry-level deal with the Blackhawks in March 2014. Despite suffering a fractured kneecap and then a wrist injury that required surgery his rookie year, causing him to miss 64 regular-season games and most of the playoffs, he impressed the coaches so much that he cracked the lineup for Game 3 of the Stanley Cup Final in 2015.

Days later, he and the Hawks secured the franchise's third title in six seasons.

The team begins its 2016-17 Cup quest Wednesday against St. Louis at the United Center.

Clearly the franchise's braintrust, including coach Joel Quenneville, has a lot of faith in the now-25-year-old. Van Riemsdyk is a quick learner. Otherwise, he wouldn't have been one of only two Blackhawks—the other being Patrick Kane—to play in all 82 regular-season games and all seven playoff contests last season.

"I think he's been playing the same as he's done since game one," said fellow defenseman Niklas Hjalmarsson, who missed only one regular-season game himself in 2015-16. "He's a great skater and good with his stick, a good modern hockey player who's good at everything."

Hjalmarsson once stood in van Riemsdyk's skates. In 2009-10, he was a 22-year-old, third-year player benefiting from the experience of players like Duncan Keith, Brent Seabrook and Brian Campbell. Now he's got three Stanley Cups and is regarded as one of the best shutdown defensemen in the league.

SEASON OPENER

Blackhawks vs. St. Louis

7 p.m. Wednesday; NBC Sports

Note: The team's traditional red carpet event, featuring past and current Hawks players, will be held starting at 4:15 p.m. Wednesday outside the United Center.

'TVR' CAN FIND THE BRIGHT SIDE OF ANYTHING

By Chris Sosa | REDEYE

To hear his teammates tell it, defenseman Trevor van Riemsdyk is the Blackhawks' Mr. Sunshine. "You never hear anything negative come out of his mouth," forward Andrew Desjardins said. RedEye put that sunny disposition to the test. To no one's surprise, the 25-year-old made every situation tolerable, except maybe one ...

You get a flat tire.

"Put that AAA card to use that you have in your wallet bulkin' it up ... If you can't use that, you can put your handyman skills to the test and see if you know how to actually change [a tire]."

Your name is misspelled on your jersey.

"That's been the case [before]. Obviously there's a bunch of little stuff with my name [that can cause mistakes], whether it's the space between the van and the Riemsdyk [or something else]. You can always keep the misspelled [jersey] as a little souvenir.

"I have a name bar or two whether it be from college or the teams I played on growing up. It's always cool to have."

Note: Nothing like this has happened since van Riemsdyk put on a Blackhawks uniform. "They're awesome; they never mess that up."

A teammate takes your stick accidentally.

"Maybe they can put it to better use than I can, score a few more goals. There's a lot left in [the stick], so if they have it, they'll find success with it."

A restaurant doesn't have your favorite meal.

"That's on me. I should have looked it up before and seen what they got. But that gives you a chance to try something new."

The NHL moves the Stanley Cup Final to Australia.

"Never been there before, so you can see some new stuff. I've heard a lot of positive things. It's always nice to see different parts of the world."

Coach Quenneville wants you to take faceoffs.

"I don't know why that would be, but I would gladly do them. In high school we used to have the defensemen take some faceoffs here and there in some certain situations. You've watched it long enough that maybe you could hold your own. I obviously wouldn't do too well against all these great centers here, but yeah, just try to hold your own the best you can."

Someone mistakes you for your older brother, James. (James van Riemsdyk is a forward with the Toronto Maple Leafs.)

"That's not bad. Maybe I'll just play along with it and give them my best James van Riemsdyk signature or whatever it may be."

A referee sends you to the penalty box for something you didn't do.

"I don't know if there is a positive spin to be put on that. You don't want to be in the box for anything."

@REDEYESPORTSCHI | CHSOSA@REDEYECHICAGO.COM

Now "TVR," as he is known in the locker room, continues to establish himself on a team that figures to be loaded at his position this season.

"He's obviously not a cocky guy, but he plays with pretty good confidence out there," forward Andrew Desjardins said. "He's an unbelievable teammate; you never hear anything negative come out of his mouth. He's a positive guy, and that's one of the most important things in a dressing room. He's never down. He's always going forward."

That's a handy outlook to have when one of your responsibilities is throwing your body in front of slap shots. Van Riemsdyk led the Hawks in blocked shots in 2015-16 with 155, a total good enough for 22nd in the league.

"That just shows that he wants to win bad and he's ready to do whatever it takes to get a win for the team," said Hjalmarsson, who was second on the team with 151.

And because you no doubt were wondering, getting hit in the head is not one of van Riemsdyk's primary concerns.

"Guys are so good that if they're hitting you in the face, obviously that means the shot was going high over the net," he said. "Guys usually don't miss like that. ... If you are so unlucky that it happens, obviously it's not a lot of fun, but it's part of the job."

Another part of his job, from time to time, is matching up with his older brother. James van Riemsdyk, 27, is a forward with the Toronto Maple Leafs. The siblings have matched up in the NHL only once, in November 2014. James scored a goal as the Maple Leafs got the better of Trevor's Blackhawks, 3-2.

"We've both been hurt so we haven't played as many times as we could have [in the NHL], but it was definitely weird [having to hit him]," Trevor said. "I remember being matched up against him a few times that night. It's definitely strange having him come down on you."

Trevor van Riemsdyk
ARMANDO L. SANCHEZ/TRIBUNE FILE

He's obviously not a cocky guy, but he plays with pretty good confidence out there. He's an unbelievable teammate; you never hear anything negative come out of his mouth. He's a positive guy, and that's one of the most important things in a dressing room. He's never down. He's always going forward."

—Blackhawks forward Andrew Desjardins, about Trevor van Riemsdyk

You don't want him to go around you or embarrass you in any way. [Laughs.] But it's fun.

"You've done it it seems like your whole life, whether it's in the basement or the driveway. I just remember my little brother being there, my parents being there and all being together after the game was pretty special."

Few athletes in any sport have had the benefit of an older sibling to show them the professional ropes, and Trevor never takes that relationship for granted.

"I text him quite a bit to see how he's doing, [and] he's texting me to check in on me, so he's obviously been through it all before and he's got a lot of advice I can draw from and he's been in the league for a pretty long time now," van Riemsdyk said.

"It's definitely a bit of an advantage to have a brother that's done it all before. ... Just in general just the way he prepared himself and looking into every little detail of how he can make himself better, whether it's on the ice, off the ice, the training he did. Just the relationships he's made, it shows you what you need to do and the things that are more important than others."

No doubt that has helped van Riemsdyk create consistency in his game and earn a badge of dependability. It's proof that all the late-night workouts when he was younger, the effort it took to recover from injury, the lessons he's learned from veteran teammates—all of it has added up to what looks to be a promising career.

"Just doing the things [coaches] ask, that's how you build up the trust," van Riemsdyk said. "They don't want to have to ask you 10 times. They just want to put it in your head and then know that they can depend on you to do it, whether it's changing up a tactic or the things you do that they want you to do a different way."

"You just want to do the things that got you here, that have gained you the trust of the coaching staff. ... Just because you see guys doing certain things doesn't mean you want to do that kind of stuff. That's when you find yourself getting in trouble. ... Defensively, just taking away time and space [from opposing forwards is what's most important]."

Van Riemsdyk has stuck to that plan, and his teammates have noticed. As a result, he hasn't even had to say much.

"He's more of a quiet guy, but I'm pretty quiet myself too," Hjalmarsson said. "But when you start talking to him, he opens up a little bit, and that's kind of how I am too. You need every single kind of character on the team, and he's a super nice guy, and I'm glad to have him as my teammate."

Jake Arrieta hits a three-run homer against the Giants in Game 3 of the NLDS in San Francisco. AP

OH, TO BE THAT GUY

FAN WHO CAUGHT ARRIETA'S HOMER STILL WAITING FOR PERFECT CUBS MOMENT

By John Puterbaugh | PIONEERPRESS

Cubs pitcher Jake Arrieta stunned Cubs fans at home and abroad when he hit a three-run home run off San Francisco ace Madison Bumgarner in Game 3 of the National League Division Series on Monday night.

But even more unlikely perhaps than Arrieta's blast is that Evanston and Chicago native Ed Baum—a lifelong Cubs fan—found himself on the receiving end of it, surrounded by heckling Giants fans. Baum, 52, was born in Chicago and lived in Evanston as a child before moving to the Bay Area. A vice president at Cisco Systems, Baum returned to attend the University of Chicago and work in Chicago before moving back to the Bay Area, where he currently lives.

Shortly after catching the ball, Baum traded it to a Cubs locker room attendant for a chance to meet Arrieta after the game, along with free Cubs gear, which included another ball signed by Arrieta. While the extra-innings loss nixed the chance to meet Arrieta, Baum said he was "absolutely going back" to the game Tuesday night, with hopes of a win and another chance to meet and celebrate with Arrieta and the Cubs.

Baum shared more about the experience, and his Chicago roots.

What do you miss most about Chicago?

I miss Wrigley Field. I love Chicago. Chicago is a great area. I don't miss the weather, I don't miss the topography [meaning everything is flat]. I miss the people.

Did you have a throwaway ball in case you caught a Giants home run ball?

No, but it's interesting that you mention that. Because I used to be a bleacher bum, especially in college ... so I'm very familiar with all the bleacher tactics.

Were nearby Giants fans nice to you?

Nice is the wrong word. People were razzing me nonstop because a lot of [local media] did interviews. ... So over time, someone would come over for an interview, they'd all start yelling, and completely appropriately. I'm the fan of the opponent who caught the ball surrounded by Giants fans. So I can't say they were nice; they were jocular. They were making fun, but in the way you do during a game ... in an appropriate, bleacher sort of way. It was exactly what you'd expect people in left field at Wrigley Field to do to Cardinals fans.

It hasn't happened yet!

Who do you think will win the World Series?
I just want the Cubs to win. The Cubs are unquestionably the best team. But the best team doesn't always win, so we just have to win some games.

4 CHICAGO CONCERTS TO CATCH THIS WEEK

By Josh Terry | REDEYE

For the Chicagoans who skipped Cubs postseason baseball to see Kanye West rock both the United Center and Allstate Arena on his floating stage during the Saint Pablo tour, it's going to be tough for a show to come close to being as impressive as that. I get it, Ye's one of the best showmen alive, but to be fair, there's a slew of awesome concerts on this week's docket—even if they're featuring artists not as famous. Check one or four of these out, enjoy the fall weather and tip your venue's bartenders. [@JOSHETERRY | JTERRY@REDEYECHICAGO.COM](mailto:@JOSHETERRY | JTERRY@REDEYECHICAGO.COM)

THURSDAY

Palm, And The Kids, Oshwa

Subterranean

2011 W. North Ave. 773-278-6600

Even before I became the music reporter at RedEye, I knew that I wanted to write about Oshwa—one of the longtime favorite Chicago outfits. Heck, I even used the art-pop act in my job application. But what was once a four-piece band is now just the vessel of singer and songwriter Alicia Walter, who released the excellent and long-awaited LP "I We You Me" in August. Walter is moving to New York next month, which is really bumming me out, but on Thursday, Chicago will have one of its last opportunities to bid this phenomenal talent adieu. Oh yeah, Palm and And The Kids are headlining. They're fine too. Tickets: subt.net

FRIDAY

Oozing Wound, Rabble Rabble, Dim

The Empty Bottle

1035 N. Western Ave. 773-276-3600

My favorite thing about Chicago thrash-trio Oozing Wound is that their music doesn't need any frills to effectively be the sonic version of a punch in the face. They're a loud rock band who are absolutely killer live, and conveniently they're releasing their sprawling and gut-punching third album, "Whatever Forever," on Friday via local label Thrill Jockey. Tickets: ticketweb.com

SATURDAY

Joyce Manor, The Hotelier, Crying

Metro

3730 N. Clark St. 773-549-4140

I'd list this concert in Show Up even if just one of these three acts were playing. All three? That's a slam dunk. Speaking of successful shots, Joyce Manor made a great new album in "Cody," their most ambitious foray into making palatable punk. Here, they split the difference between pop punk with fuzz-laden indie rock, giving the best of both worlds throughout the record's lean 10 tracks. I'd also be an idiot if I didn't mention former Pitchfork Fest performers The Hotelier, whose album "Goodness" I was rightfully roasted online for not including in RedEye's Top 25 Albums of 2016 mid-year roundup. Tickets: etix.com

SUNDAY

Sia, Miguel, AlunaGeorge

United Center

1901 W. Madison St. 312-455-4500

I'm not the hugest fan of Sia, but I do love many of the songs she's been a part of writing, like Beyoncé's "Pretty Hurts" or Rihanna's "Diamonds." That said, Miguel is the best, and if you were unlucky enough to miss his sexy-AF Pitchfork set, you'd be smart not to miss this one. Tickets: ticketmaster.com

Don't mess with Kim K

After being robbed of $11 million of jewelry in Paris last week, Kim Kardashian West is now being tasked with having to defend the fact that she was, indeed, robbed, according to thr.com. She's suing mediatakeout.com and its owner for libel, over articles that claimed that she "faked the robbery, lied about the violent assault, and then filed a fraudulent claim with her insurance company to bilk her carrier out of millions of dollars," a Kardashian attorney wrote in a complaint filed Tuesday. "As if [the robbery and assault] were not awful enough, Defendants made it worse by publishing on the Website, only hours after the assault, that Kardashian faked the robbery and then committed insurance fraud by filing a false claim with her carrier," the complaint says. Can we all just leave her alone, please?

THE DIGIT

1,600

That's how many people showed up to David Lynch's first-ever Festival of Disruption in Los Angeles this past weekend in hopes of catching some glimpse of the upcoming "Twin Peaks" revival, according to vulture.com. The guests weren't actually treated to any sneak peaks, but they were in the presence of Special Agent Dale Cooper himself, Kyle MacLachlan, and Laura Dern, who will be joining the Showtime series. "It's gonna be amazing," MacLachlan said, one of the only pieces of information the crowd got. What a tease.

Off again

Drake and Rihanna, AKA the king and queen of "are they, aren't they" coupledom, have once again called it quits, reverting to their usual stance of "just friends." After the rapper publicly confessed his love for the singer at the MTV VMAs in August while presenting her with the Video Vanguard Award, the two were seen getting matching tattoos and being coupley AF, but now E! News is reporting (citing an unnamed "insider") that they're seeing other people. Whatever it takes for Drake to have new [bleep] to whine about on his next album, we guess.

Another one

Clint Eastwood's last directorial venture, "Sully," is still in theaters, but he is reportedly already lining up another one. According to variety.com, the octogenarian is considering directing "Impossible Odds," an autobiography just optioned by Warner Bros. about aid worker Jessica Buchanan, who was kidnapped by Somali militants in 2011 and rescued by a Navy SEAL team in 2012. This film follows the trend of his previous projects, "American Sniper" and "Sully," described by Variety as "ordinary people who are thrown into extraordinary situations and rise to the challenge." You know, when he's not yelling at chairs at a Republican convention.

THE QUOTE

"My whole life, I didn't understand my own gender and my own sexuality. I always hated the word 'bisexual,' because that's even putting me in a box. I don't ever think about someone being a boy or someone being a girl."

—Miley Cyrus, to Variety, about how she became involved with the LGBTQ community. The former Disney starlet, currently a coach on "The Voice," has established herself as an LGBTQ activist. She talked to the magazine about identifying as pansexual and recalled the first time she met a gender-neutral person, saying, "I related to that person more than I related to anyone in my life." She added, "Once I understood my gender more, which was unassigned, then I understood my sexuality more. I was like, 'Oh—that's why I don't feel straight and I don't feel gay. It's because I'm not.'"
